OBAMA'S RX

PRESIDENT PLEADS FOR SUPPORT OF HEALTH-CARE REFORM; DOCTORS, LIKE MANY OTHER GROUPS, DIVIDED OVER PLAN

Associated Press

President Obama asked skeptical doctors Monday to get behind an overhaul of the nation's health-care system, declaring it a "ticking time bomb" for the budget that could force America to "go the way of GM."

The difficulty of his task was evident when he said he's against capping awards in malpractice lawsuits, a top priority for doctors, and earned a smattering of boos—a remarkable public response to a popular president accustomed to cheering audiences.

Flying to his hometown to speak at the annual meeting here of the American Medical Association, Obama struck back forcefully at those speaking out against his efforts to reshape the health-care delivery system to bring skyrocketing health-care costs under control and expand coverage to the millions of uninsured.

He had his sharpest rhetoric yet for critics, calling them "naysayers," "fear-mongers" and peddlers of "Trojan horse" falsehoods who should be ignored. He warned interest groups and lobbyists not to use "fear tactics to paint any effort to achieve reform as an attempt to socialize medicine."

At what cost?

The president said for the first time publicly that health-care reform, including covering the almost 50 million Americans who have no insurance, will cost about $1 trillion over 10 years. Obama has taken steps in recent days to outline just where that money could be found. For instance, he wants to cut federal payments to hospitals by about $200 billion and cut $313 billion from Medicare and Medicaid over 10 years. He also is proposing a $635 billion "down payment" in tax increases and spending cuts in the health-care system.

"There are those who will try and scuttle this opportunity no matter what," Obama said.

Even before Obama spoke, Republicans offered push-back.

GOP Rep. Tom Price of Georgia—a former orthopedic surgeon—accused Obama of pushing a "government takeover" of health care. Speaking to reporters on a conference call organized by the Republican National Committee, Price contended that a committee that Obama's administration has established to study the effectiveness of various medical treatments would turn into a "rationing board" to overrule doctors and deny patients care.

Obama traveled to Chicago to talk to the 250,000-physician group in hopes of persuading doctors not to fight him. The nation's doctors, like many other groups, are divided over the president's proposals.

He drew hearty applause with a focus on the particular concerns of the medical profession: telling them any system that relies on them "to be bean-counters and paper-pushers" is out of whack and that his push to investigate best-practices and eliminate unnecessary procedures "is not about dictating what kind of care should be provided."

"I need your help, doctors," he said. "To most Americans, you are the health care system. Americans, me included, just do what you recommend. That is why I will listen to you and work with you to pursue reform that works for you."

TRACY SWARTZ

Hey, door-blockers: Move it or lose it

What would Emily Post say if she rode the CTA? Surely the Mistress of American Manners would wince if she saw riders taking up multiple seats or overheard their loud cell phone conversations. She probably wouldn't want to make acquaintance with bus passengers who block the exit or train riders who clip their toenails in between stops.

"Going Public" typically gets a few e-mails or tweets a week about etiquette mishaps on the CTA. Here are the best of the worst.

A stand for manners

Just thought I'd share some thoughts for the woman who rudely charged into me to get off the No. 151 [bus last month].

» If you see that the bus is packed, ideally commuters exit at the back.

» If you choose nevertheless to exit in front, expect people to be in the way and the right thing to do is say "excuse me" and gently make your way through.

» If you feel like the doors are closing before you get anywhere near the exit, you can always say "Hold the door, please." I'm sure they'll patiently wait for you.

» If you bump into someone (especially someone half your size that was pushed toward the bus driver), apologize.

I'm sure the lady had her reason for being in such a hurry, but seriously! It felt like a wrestler was about to bring me down.

—RANDI ROSE GUTIERREZ, 31, GOLD COAST

Sound and fury

Despite the slow zones on the Blue Line, my complaint is with the riders. Buy better headphones that fit or turn down your music. Either you don't know or don't care that everyone on your train is forced to listen to your music. But no one wants to hear the drowned-out version of whatever song you are listening to mixed with the drowned-out songs of the other two passengers whose headphones either suck or are blowing out their eardrums.

—LAURA KRAUS, 31, BUCKTOWN

Make the right moves

Attention all CTA door blockers: Get out of the way! You are not special. You are annoying as hell and make it harder to enter and exit the train. You know me. I'm the one who bumps into you every chance I get.

—BETH GROGAN, 37, ROSCOE VILLAGE

The state of CTA stations

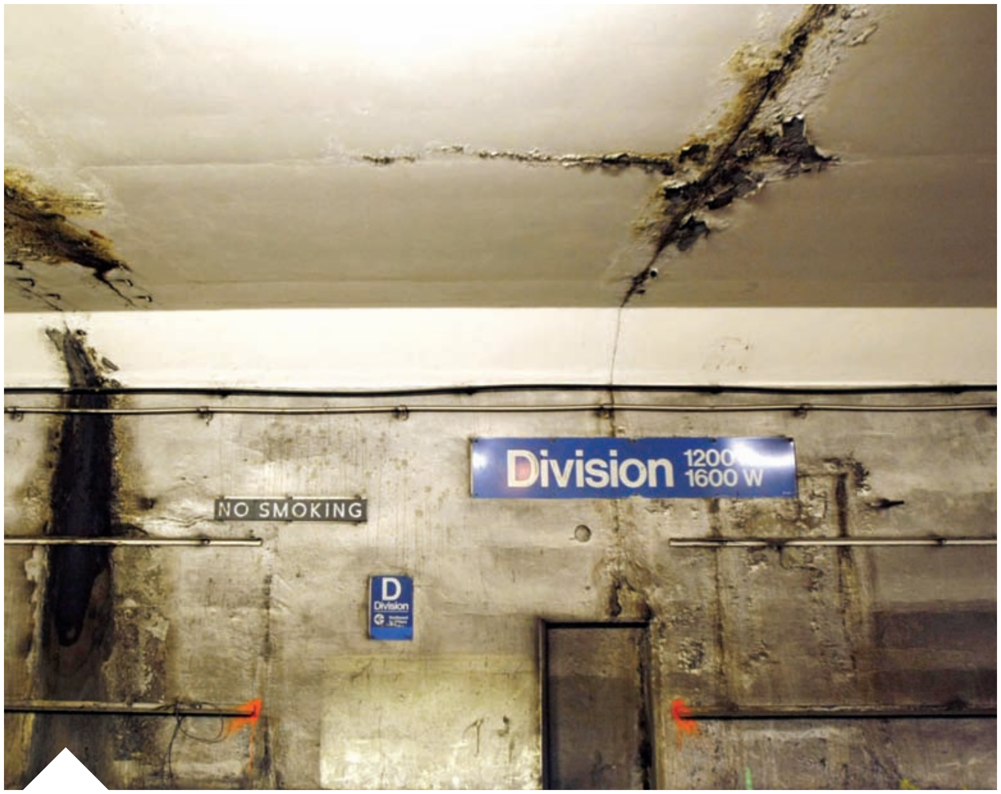
Chicago Tribune

One CTA rail station looks like it has been lost in time and might collapse at any moment from neglect. Another mimics a limestone cave, complete with stalactite-like deposits hanging down from the ceiling and walls.

Then there are the newly rehabbed stations: bright and clean and ready to show off to visitors from around the world.

But old or new, most of the CTA's stations have one thing in common: an increase in ridership. In fact, rail ridership is up 4.3 percent for the year through May compared with the same five-month period in 2008.

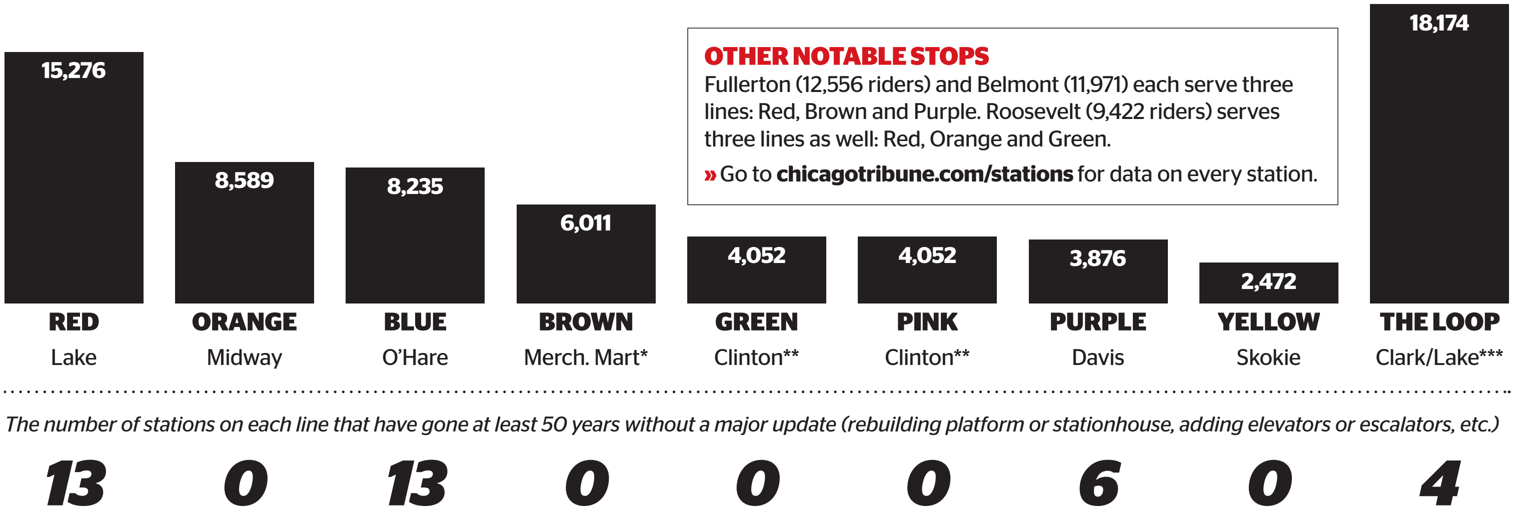
The Tribune looks at the CTA's 144 stations and shows which ones move the most people—and which ones have gone the longest without a major renovation.



DIVISION: BLUE LINE
If dingy walls, dirt-encrusted floors and poor lighting aren't bad enough, water pools on the tracks after it rains, turning debris thrown by passengers into a syrupy sludge. Be careful where you step: Miscellaneous objects hidden behind pillars create a tripping hazard.

RAIL RIDERSHIP AND RENOVATIONS

The busiest CTA stations on each line (measured by average weekday ridership by entry in April 2009)



OTHER NOTABLE STOPS
Fullerton (12,556 riders) and Belmont (11,971) each serve three lines: Red, Brown and Purple. Roosevelt (9,422 riders) serves three lines as well: Red, Orange and Green.

SOME OF THE WORST—AND BEST—OF THE CTA

By Jon Hilkevitch, Tribune Getting Around columnist

NORTH AND CLYBOURN: RED LINE
Picked by the CTA and the city for a complete overhaul whenever funding becomes available, the rehab of this State Street subway station cannot happen too soon. Until then, thorough cleanings are needed on a more regular basis to keep up with the stalactites and unidentifiable molds growing on the filthy subway ceiling and walls.

FOSTER: PURPLE LINE
Our candidate for the most-neglected station on the North Shore, this is surely a rail stop that time forgot. Peeling paint on the canopy flakes off onto the platform, and rust permeates the steel girders holding up the station.

Conservatory

CONSERVATORY: GREEN LINE
A gem that proves modern is not the only way to success. This historic Queen Anne-style station house, named for the Garfield Park Conservatory just steps away, opened in 2001 and looks as good or better than it did more than 100 years ago. The station and portions of the canopies were salvaged from the former Homan station, which was one of the original stops on the Lake Street Elevated Railroad that opened in 1893 when steam locomotives pulled the trains.

HOWARD TERMINAL
Once a gigantic pigeon roost that also served transit customers, this terminal was revitalized over the past two years. The bright design, with escalators, elevators and a new entrance near a commuter parking garage, represents what a major transportation center that serves three rail lines and numerous bus routes should be.

Coming soon to Wal-Mart site: Aldi

Aldi plans to open a grocery store next year at a South Side shopping center also eyed by Wal-Mart, which has been stymied for five years in a battle with unions.

The supermarket chain signed a lease to open at Chatham Market at 83rd Street and Stewart Avenue, according to documents filed with Cook County.

The 17,000-square-foot freestanding building is slated to debut in late 2010 and will follow Aldi's new prototype design, touting high ceilings, windows and generally a "brighter, warmer more welcoming look and feel," said Aldi spokeswoman Martha Swaney, who confirmed the deal.

Aldi operates about 120 stores in the Chicago area and about 1,000 nationwide.

The agreement comes as pressure builds on the city to allow Wal-Mart to build a supercenter on the site. City Council is expected to vote as soon as June 30 on a proposal to repeal a clause in the Chatham Market redevelopment agreement that has kept Wal-Mart out.

The clause requires the city planning department to approve any user going into the property that occupies more than 100,000 square feet. The unusual term stems from the original developer's 2004 pledge to keep Wal-Mart from coming into the development as part of negotiations to rezone the former steel manufacturing site for retail.

The hope is that the recession and the city's need for tax revenue to fill budget gaps will sway aldermen who have in the past voted to keep Wal-Mart from expanding in the city.

Wal-Mart opened a 142,000-square-foot discount store in Austin in 2006, but the retailer has run into union opposition to build any more. It has been trying to build a store in Chatham since at least 2004.

Academic aromas

Masik Collegiate Fragrances is turning out a line of perfumes inspired by your favorite alma mater—including school colors, campus trees and flowers, said founder Katie Masich, 30, who started the company last year.

For example, eau de Penn State features blue cypress and cracked pepper vapor for men and white patchouli and vanilla for women. Louisiana State's purple and gold palette is captured by notes of plum, golden bourbon and honey. North Carolina is not redolent of Michael Jordan (a Tar Heel alum), but an Old South combo of orange, jasmine and violet.

City closes doughnut shop

The Dunkin' Donuts at 201 W. Madison St. in the Loop was shut down Monday because of several health code violations, the Chicago Department of Public Health said. The restaurant was inspected on June 8, when managers were warned of an infestation of fruit flies, and were told to expect a re-inspection within a week, according to the health department. The shop will need to pass a re-inspection and will remain closed until further notice, officials said.

Cops seek N. Side sex assault suspect

Chicago police issued a community alert for a man who is wanted for aggravated criminal sexual assault, after an incident Monday in an alley of the 3800 block of North Whipple Street in Irving Park. The offender is reported to have been driving an older model, possibly classic 1960s, orange-colored vehicle, and implied he had a handgun, according to the alert. Anyone with information is asked to call 312-746-8282.

Police shoot teen at school

Answering a burglar alarm at Whittier Elementary School in Pilsen on Monday morning, Chicago police shot a 14-year-old boy in the leg who aimed a rifle at them, police said. Police found the boy and his 13-year-old brother in a third-floor computer room. The gun, which resembled a shotgun, was actually a black BB/pellet gun, said police spokesman Roderick Drew. Independent Police Review Authority spokesman Mark Payne said the agency is investigating the shooting.

Iran protester slain after rally

7 TEHRAN Gunfire from a pro-government militia killed one man and wounded several others Monday after hundreds of thousands of chanting opponents of President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad marched in central Tehran to support their pro-reform leader in his first public appearance since disputed elections.

The outpouring in Azadi, or Freedom, Square for reformist leader Mir Hossein Mousavi followed a decision by Iran's most powerful figure for an investigation into the vote-rigging allegations.

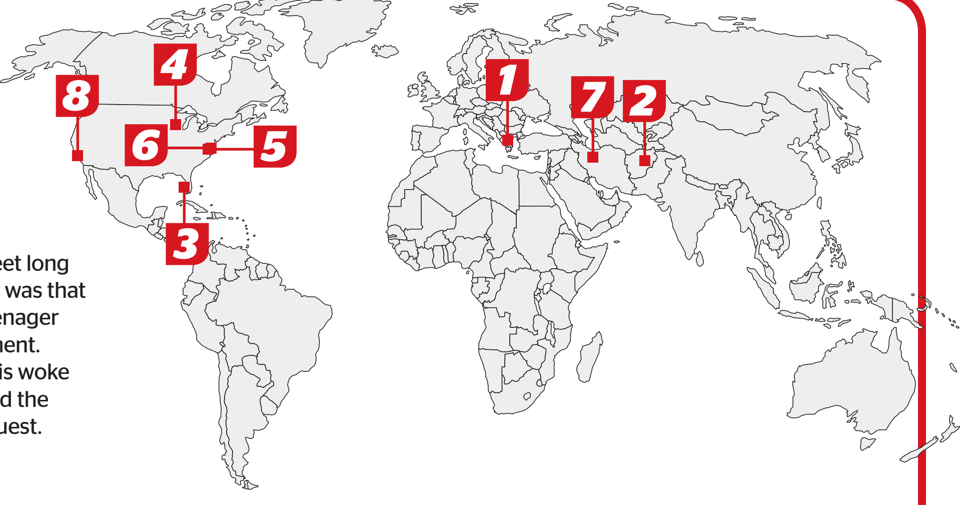
WHAT A CROWD

The crowd—many wearing the trademark green color of Mir Hossein Mousavi's campaign—was more than five miles long.

Security forces watched quietly, with shields and batons at their sides. But a group of demonstrators with fuel canisters set a small fire at a compound of a volunteer militia linked to Iran's powerful Revolutionary Guard as the crowd dispersed from the square. As some tried to storm the building, people on the roof could be seen firing directly at the demonstrators at the northern edge of the square, away from the heart of the rally.

The U.S. was "deeply troubled" by reports of violence and arrests in Iran, State Department spokesman Ian Kelly said, but he added that the U.S. knows too little about the conduct of the election to say for sure whether there was fraud.

The chanting demonstrators had defied an Interior Ministry ban and streamed into central Tehran.



Survey: Internet helps to erode family time

8 Whether it's around the dinner table or sitting in front of the TV, U.S. families say they are spending less time together. The decline in family time coincides with a rise in Internet use, and the boom of social networks—though a new report stops just short of assigning blame.

The report is from the Annenberg Center for the Digital Future at the University of Southern California.

The center is reporting that 28 percent of Americans it interviewed last year said they have been spending less time with members of their households. Only 11 percent said that in 2006.

THEN: In 2008, the Cubs had eight All-Stars (from left): Geovany Soto, Kosuke Fukudome, Alfonso Soriano, Ryan Dempster, Carlos Marmol, Kerry Wood, Carlos Zambrano and Aramis Ramirez.

NOW: Soriano is the only player in the Top 5 in voting at their position. He's No. 4, about 14,000 votes out of third place. Fukudome is No. 15 among outfielders.

Then and ... wow

What a difference a year makes for the Cubs and White Sox

RedEye

It's that time of year again: Cubs vs. White Sox. City Series. Crosstown Classic. Call it whatever you want. For Chicago baseball fans, it doesn't get any better than this. Or does it?

Last season, the hype for the city's baseball civil war was through the roof. Both teams were in first place. Both produced All-Stars. Both had legitimate reasons to believe a World Series awaited them.

This season, though, has been a struggle on both sides of town.

Here's a look at the Cubs and Sox of 2008 vs. the Cubs and Sox of 2009. TRIBUNE CONTRIBUTED.

CROSSTOWN CLASSIC

Cubs vs. White Sox

7:05 p.m. WGN, CSN

Kevin Nealon throws out the first pitch. That could end up as the game's highlight.

CUBS

THEN: Catcher Geovany Soto was the toast of the town on the way to winning the NL Rookie of the Year award.

NOW: He's hitting .223 with three homers and 16 RBIs.

WHITE SOX

THEN: Infielder Alexei Ramirez was a pleasant surprise, eventually finishing second in the AL rookie race.

NOW: Ramirez is underachieving with a .252 .batting average, five homers and 27 RBIs.

Quentin

WHITE SOX

THEN: Joe Crede and Carlos Quentin represented the White Sox at the All-Star Game.

NOW: This season, no Sox players are among the top vote-getters.

FRONT AND CENTRAL

CUBS

THEN: The Cubs entered the City Series last season first in the NL Central with a lead of 3 ½ games over St. Louis.

NOW: Fourth place, 3 games behind Milwaukee.

WHITE SOX

THEN: The Sox also enjoyed a 3 ½-game lead over second place. The Twins, or Piranhas, as Ozzie Guillen calls them, would eventually catch the Sox and force a one-game playoff that the Sox won.

NOW: The Sox are better than the Cubs, by one spot: third in the AL Central. They are 4 ½ games behind Bag Boy's hated Detroit Tigers. Yes, Chicago sports fans, Detroit again.

PITCHING A FIT

Gregg

CUBS

THEN: Kerry Wood, finally healthy, gave the Cubs a dependable closer after Ryan Dempster vacated the position to become a starter.

NOW: Wood's gone, and in his place is Kevin Gregg, he of the geeky glasses, two blown saves (in 12 opportunities) and 4.13 ERA.

Contreras

WHITE SOX

THEN: White Sox starters were second in the majors with a combined 3.63 ERA, and Mark Buehrle, John Danks, Gavin Floyd, Jose Contreras and Javier Vazquez entrenched in the starting rotation.

NOW: The Sox are 13th in the majors with a 4.18 ERA—that's good for fourth in the AL—but the team's search for a fifth starter has been well-documented. It's gotten to the point that the Sox have re-signed Freddy Garcia.

The plots thicken

To help you get ready for the Windy City baseball showdown, here are the Top 10 Cubs vs. Sox story lines.

Ozzie vs. Wrigley

10 "But one thing about Wrigley Field, I puke every time I go there," Guillen said Sunday.

Cubs' new hitting coach

9 Cubs brass had seen enough of the team's impotent offense and replaced hitting coach Gerald Perry with Von Joshua.

Ozzie vs. Black Jack

8 After former Sox pitcher "Black Jack" McDowell criticized Guillen for the way he's handled Gordon Beckham, Ozzie fired back: "When people have little knowledge about the game, all of a sudden you turn around like, 'Oh, I guess he don't know [bleep] about baseball.' "

Injured superstars

7 The Cubs and Sox are playing without arguably their best player: Carlos Quentin from the Sox and Aramis Ramirez from the Cubs.

Milton Bradley

6 The Cubs' three-year, $30 million mistake can't even keep track of the outs in an inning and has ended up turning off Cubbie nation.

Rookies

5 Much is expected of callups Beckham and Jake Fox of the Cubs, and they'll have their first chance to endear themselves to their fans.

Managers ready to explode

4 Guillen and Lou Piniella are due for a nuclear meltdown.

Offensive offenses

3 The Sox are on pace to break the dubious record of most shutouts in a season. And the anemic Cubs have scored four or more runs in a game only four times in June.

This might be it

2 If either team doesn't find a way to rise from the depths of mediocrity, it's going to be a long, ugly summer.

Cubs fans vs. Sox fans

1 This week it's about making it known where your loyalty lies and denouncing those who don the jersey of your nemesis.

1 What's the best way to watch a Cubs-White Sox game?	With a fan of the other side and a body bag.	If you're Jimmy, it's on bended knee. Praying, right?	With a pre-written list of go-to heckles, slams and burns. I've got 47 so far.	At home by yourself in a closet.	At the White House while discussing the economy and North Korea with Obama.
2 What is Ozzie Guillen thinking about Wrigley Field today?	He'll use it to make another excuse for why he has puke breath.	He's going to trash it, but oops, too late, the fans did it for him.	Labada burrda howma fling tang manah, guys. Ting fuh show nah, you know?	That it's still a dump with rats.	Minus the 100-plus F-bomb adjectives, he thinks it's a really [bleeping] nice place.
3 What happens first: a Cub gets injured or a Sox player gets a hit?	The way things are going for the Cubs it'll happen at the same time.	Black+ Blue = injury. Piniella will be red all over.	Great. Now Theriot's getting nailed by a Dye liner. Thanks, Chicago JinxEye.	A ball will ricochet off a Cubs player causing injury, resulting in a Sox hit.	It's a tie. Zambrano aggravates his hamstring trying to field Thome's bunt single.
4 Who is the most overrated Cubs or Sox player?	"I answer that in my book: "How Milton Bradley Stole $30 Million And Got Away With It."	Alfonso Soriano. Why buy the holy cow when you can get the milk for free?	Cubs: Milton Bradley. Sox: also Milton Bradley.	Ron Santo.	In the spirit of bipartisanship: Sammy Sosa.
5 How will Cubs fans greet Soxman at Wrigley?	With a pat on the head and an "Awww, isn't he cute." The same way they treat Ryan Theriot.	With the "loser" hand gesture. Cubs fans certainly know what an "L" looks like.	Warmly. We don't discriminate against anyone on the basis of sexual orientation.	Who? You mean Jerry Reinsdorf or Kenny Williams?	No answer. I remember "Ghostbusters." I refuse to choose the form of my destruction!

Jenks ignores 'jackass' hecklers

Closer Bobby Jenks says he has learned quickly not to get caught up in the hype surrounding the White Sox-Cubs series, especially at Wrigley Field.

That's because the heckling he has heard from fans while sitting in the bullpen is no different than what he has heard at other venues.

"It's just another jackass in the stands," Jenks said of the hecklers. "That's all they are, whether they're at Wrigley or Toronto. So it's just part of the game where you block it out and play some ball.

"After a few years of hearing it, it's all the same [trash]. Just another day at the ballpark."

Jenks might not need any extra motivation. The velocity of his fastball, a source of concern among several observers, was clocked Sunday at 97 mph.

» Yes, Reed Johnson saw tape of the "bird game" in Cleveland last week when a flock of sea gulls took off as a game-winning hit went to center field. Johnson seems to be in center at Wrigley Field when gulls swarm, usually very late in the afternoon, like late in the 3 p.m. start for Fox television this year. "I didn't have any balls hit to me, but I was worried about it," Johnson said. "I know you've seen them get blown up by pitches in the past, so you know they're not quick enough to react and get out of the way. That's always a concern.

"The only time it bothers me is when the ball is hit in the same area. I just hope no one hits it out there when those things decide to fly."

» A.J. Pierzynski is remembered in the Sox-Cubs series for getting sucker-punched by Michael Barrett, but Pierzynski still relishes the payback when he hit a three-run, game-winning home run off Ryan Dempster in the rematch series at Wrigley in 2006.

"It was great," Pierzynski said. "It was one of the coolest moments of my career, especially during the regular season."

» New Jersey-born Giuseppe Rossi scored twice and Daniele De Rossi had a goal, leading Italy over the U.S. 3-1 Monday night in the FIFA Confederations Cup.

8 million

Average number of viewers who watched Friday night's Stanley Cup finals Game 7 between Detroit and Pittsburgh, making it the most watched since 1973, NBC said Monday.

» Former N.Y. Giants receiver Plaxico Burress is negotiating with several NFL teams to return this season after a judge delayed his trial Monday on gun possession charges to Sept. 23.

Skip the tie and make this Father's Day a little less traditional

By Lisa Balde

Every year, Dad's Day gifts unfailingly come in variations of the same three offerings: golf balls, polo shirts and zany neckties. And that's totally fine—if your dad's a golf-happy preppy whose office promotes crazy-tie Fridays. But if the man who drove you to your first concert (and still sends you oil-change reminders) breaks the department-store mold, you'll need more creative ammunition. Here's how to show Dad a great time on Father's Day this Sunday based on his quirky style.

Floyd's 99
JASON LITTLE FOR METROMIX

The grill-master

Your dad: He taught you how to precisely build a charcoal pyramid at the ripe age of 5, and his favorite meal of the day is dictated by the volume of beef on the plate.

His day: Skip special-occasion brunches and head to Sheffield's (3258 N. Sheffield Ave. 773-281-4989) for a meal of grilled eats from the Wrigleyville bar's new Backroom BBQ menu. Dads get a raffle entry for free Cubs tickets and—brace yourself—a sleeve of golf balls (beginning at 10 a.m.). After lunch, add a few more tricks to Dad's grilling arsenal during the Father's Day BBQ Bonanza class (2 p.m., $85 per person) at The Chopping Block (4747 N. Lincoln Ave. 773-472-6700). Students grill skirt steak and baby back ribs on the Lincoln Square cooking school's brand new outdoor patio and get to sample their eats with beer and baked beans. Seats are expected to fill up fast, so call soon.

The trendsetter

Your dad: With George Clooney as his unofficial role model, Dad likes to look slick. He's no metrosexual, as he'd say, but your dad would never think of squashing his freshly combed coif under a baseball cap or soiling his slacks working on the car.

His day: Schedule Dad an appointment for a hot-towel shave at just-opened rock 'n' roll barber shop and salon, Floyd's 99 (2572 N. Clark St. 773-325-2704). The old-school treatment ($24) includes a hot-lather neck shave and shoulder massage, and as a first-time customer, he'll be treated to a free scalp massage as well. Dad will be impressed that this high-end national chain has a celeb client list that includes Anderson Cooper and Chris Isaak, both spotted at the Denver location. After his shave, treat Dad to something new at menswear boutique Cram (3331 N. Broadway. 773-477-1737) before heading back home to surprise Mom.

The beer connoisseur

Your dad: While other dads swill Bud and Miller at baseball games, yours hangs around the Beers of the World vendor. His basement bar's stocked with four types of beer glasses, and he's a brew-of-the-month regular.

His day: Surprise him with a six-pack of Half Acre Brewery's new Daisy Cutter Pale Ale, arriving Wednesday at Drinks Over Dearborn (650 N. Dearborn St. 2nd Floor. 312-337-9463). It'll serve as a nice warm-up for the day's main event at The Publican (837 W. Fulton Market. 312-733-9555), where Father Isaac of the famed La Trappe Abbey and monastery-based De Koningshoeven Brewery oversees a beer dinner (seatings from 5-10 p.m., $65). Pairings include the Chicago premiere of La Trappe Whitte with a sweet strawberry salad and the brewery's 125th anniversary beer, Isid'or pale ale, with softshell crab.

The art lover

Your dad: He bought satellite radio so he could listen to world music on his way to work, was known to sneakily tuck art-school brochures in your backpack during your senior year of high school and constantly adds to his collection of art history books.

His day: You know he's dying to check out the Art Institute of Chicago's new Modern Wing. Do him one better and make lunch reservations at the Wing's swanky new rooftop Italian eatery Terzo Piano (159 E. Monroe St. 312-443-8650), named after architect Renzo Piano and created by Spiaggia chef Tony Mantuano. Spend the rest of the afternoon at the museum before heading across the street to Pritzker Pavilion's Great Lawn for a free performance by harp-rocking, Colombian folk musicians Cimarron (6:30 p.m.), making their Chicago debut as part of the Music Without Borders series.

Fit to dance

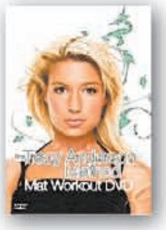
The latest dance-toning videos put a new spin on getting in shape and burning calories. MCT FILE

Los Angeles Times

Who says you have to lift heavy dumbbells to build muscle? These days, more exercise instructors are building strength through dance-inspired toning moves, using little to no extra weight. The high repetitions in these workouts will provide you with more of a calorie-torching cardio workout than a session on the gym's weight machines. Four of the best of this new breed of dance-toning videos are reviewed here.

Tracy Anderson Method Mat Workout

$29.95 at tracyandersonmethoddvd.amazonwebstore.com



Former dancer Tracy Anderson is best known for shaping the bodies of Gwyneth Paltrow and Madonna. Here, in a total-body workout, she shares her plan for getting a "teeny tiny" dancer's figure.

Some of Anderson's claims are a little dubious. In the arms sections, for instance, she says that the moves will pull hanging skin back to the muscle. She also asserts that no woman should ever use more than 3-pound weights lest she become bulky.

Anderson is the DVD's biggest strength and weakness. The camera work focuses more on her lovely face and physique than on proper alignment.

Element: Ballet Conditioning

$14.99 at retail outlets and online

element
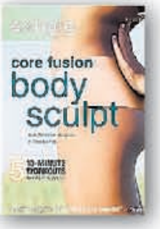
conditioning

This workout, led by Elise Gulan, a former principal dancer with the Virginia Ballet Co., leads you through a 49-minute series of classic ballet moves—plies, tondues and ronds de jambe—to tone the lower body.

Most of the work is done behind a chair to the accompaniment of Gulan's soothing voice and some low-key jazz music. High repetitions and subtle variations of each move make for a graceful but difficult leg series. And the Pilates mat workout at the end will challenge even the most experienced practitioners. Just don't expect a total-body workout.

Exhale: Core Fusion Body Sculpt

$14.99 at acaciacatalog.com



Fred DeVito and Elisabeth Halfpapp of Santa Monica's Exhale mind and body spa have gained a following for their popular Core Fusion classes, which use the exerciser's body weight and the lightest of hand weights—2 pounds for women and 5 for men—to deliver an intense toning workout.

This DVD, set in a Zen-inspired studio space, runs viewers through four short but intense workouts for the upper body, legs, butt and abs before ending in a 10-minute stretch to lengthen the muscles you just worked. There's nothing revolutionary here—just straightforward strength training for the arms and dance-inspired leg lifts, squats and plies for the legs and rear.

Jeanette Jenkins Sexy Arms, Abs & Legs

$19.95 at collagevideo.com

JEANETTE JENKINS
HOLLYWOOD TRAINER
Sexy

In this hourlong video, Jenkins leads intermediate exercisers through a hodgepodge of dance-inspired toning, from ballet grande plies to vampy hip circles.

This workout probably will disappoint hard-core dance fans. The "sexy" cardio moves won't impress anyone on the dance floor, and Jenkins bobbles her way through the ballet arabesques right along with you. However, the combination of these silly moves, Jenkins' engaging personality and the mix of old ZZ Top, Blondie and Romantics songs distract you from how hard a workout you're getting. Just when you've gotten your fill of one-legged squats or standing abdominal work, the action shifts back to the Laker Girls-type dance steps.

Roker's Speidi encounter has RedEye thinking of a new kind of forecast

If you haven't seen it yet, you need to find a clip of Al Roker's mildly intense interview with Heidi and Spencer Pratt on the "Today" show Monday.

The couple, still in the news for their antics on "I'm a Celebrity ... Get Me Out of Here!," unsurprisingly mined the less-than-six-minute interview for all the publicity it was worth. After the spot, in which Roker asked Heidi Pratt if she was proud of the couple's behavior on "Celebrity," the reality TV diva told Ryan Seacrest in a radio interview that she felt "personally attacked" by the weatherman and said she "would advise women especially to be careful around him." Then they went on MTV News and did more of the same.

For his part, Roker reportedly tweeted that the couple were famous only for their "bad and vacuous behavior" and later used Twitter to link to the interview online.

Long story short, the whole thing was awkward. In honor of the weatherman's interview, RedEye has devised its own celebrity forecast for the rest of the week.

Al Roker
NBC

TUE.

High chance of thunder, lightning

David Letterman-gate continues when Sarah Palin releases yet another incendiary statement about the late-night host. Her insinuations that he is a vampire backfire, however, when "Twilight" enthusiasts adopt Letterman as their mascot. And all this after he said sorry on Monday.

WED.

Lots of hot air

Heidi and Spencer Pratt continue to drum up publicity for themselves. Incredibly, it continues to work.

THU.

Showers give way to mudslides

As Usher and Tameka Foster's reported trip to Splitsville continues, the gloves come off. We discover the R&B star actually is a vampire, but this rumor is quickly quashed when we find the claim was made by statement-releasing fan Sarah Palin.

FRI.

Sunny with a chance of rainbows

The Jonas Brothers say something adorable to get everyone geared up for the weekend.

SAT.

Cold and dark

The Jon and Kate Gosselin saga continues. He says some crazy stuff. Then she says some crazy stuff. Then the tabloids say some crazy stuff. Meanwhile, "Jon & Kate Plus 8" backers hurry to book another season of the wholesome family show.

Twitter quick hit

We posed the following question to RedEye's Twitter followers: Heidi and Spencer plus Al Roker equals ... Here's a few of the highlights. You can chime in with RedEye any time at twitter.com/redeyechicago.

blood types

Now that "True Blood" is back on HBO, vampire fans have something a little more adult to quench their thirst, according to star Sam Trammell.

Trammell, who plays bar owner Sam Merlotte on the HBO series, told E! that he hasn't read the "Twilight" books, but, "The sense I get is 'Twilight' is PG and ['True Blood'} is bordering on NC-17," he says.

Along those lines, Trammell told E! the show's over-the-top sex scenes were good motivation for the cast to stay in shape. Of going up against co-star Ryan Kwanten (who plays Sookie's brother, Jason Stackhouse) in a shirtless scene: "It doesn't feel great. No matter how good of shape you are in, you're going to look bad."

That woman photographed sitting one seat away from Chris Brown during Game 5 of the NBA finals Sunday? The one all the bloggers were talking about Monday? Not Rihanna. Turns out The Associated Press and other outlets mistook recording artist Teyana Taylor, who was wearing an outfit and glasses not unlike Rihanna does, for Chris Brown's former flame.

Husbandly advice

Pinkett-Smith

Jada Pinkett-Smith had vowed never to do a TV series again. But when she got the call about "HawthoRNe," her husband, Will, encouraged her. "I read it and then I let my husband read it," she told reporters during a recent phone interview. "And he said, 'You know, take the meeting and see.'" She took the meeting, and now she stars as chief nursing officer Christina Hawthorne on the show, which premieres at 8 p.m. Tuesday on TNT. The actress says she's still getting advice from her hubby. "My husband is a plethora of information," she said. "... I'm grateful for him."

Letterman is sorry

On second thought, David Letterman says his joke about Willow Palin wasn't that funny. The comedian apologized Monday to Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin and her family on the "Late Show" for making a crack last week about Willow, 14, getting "knocked up" by Yankees slugger Alex Rodriguez, according to The New York Times. Letterman said he had confused the Palin daughters—Bristol is 18—and described the joke as "beyond flawed."
